Death Education in Schools The Original Afterlife

It is my belief that death awareness should part of every child s education, but the idea of death education in schools is as taboo today as sex education was when I was ten years old more than 50 years ago. If I was a teacher advocating for sex education back in 1960, I'd probably get fired, or possibly arrested. But thanks to the work of bold researchers and social activists in recent

10th World Research Congress of the European Association

For each patient, data were submitted on age at death, sex, ethnicity, diagnosis at referral, and number of days between referral and death. Each hospice provided data on total number of unique patient referrals received during 2015, number of in-patient beds, and staff capacity for community nursing teams and palliative care doctors.

A Life or Good Death Situation A Worldwide Ecological

Palliative care advocates argue that service implementation is feasible in all settings. Yet, services have developed patchily in low- and middle-income settings. Beyond Human Development Index indicators, there has been limited engagement with the broader development challenges facing nations tasked with implementing palliative care.
