Political Change And Environmental Policymaking In Mexico

Taking the policymaking process as a vehicle to understanding political change in Mexico, and based on the results of filed research presented here, this dissertation advances the thesis that environmental policymaking during the administration of Ernesto Zedillo Ponce de Leon (1994--2000) was a partially open process as it incorporated the demands of some societal actors and it involved the active participation of Members of Congress. This points to a departure from the traditional
