Structure and Function and Evidence of Evolution Shmoop

When we think about evolution, we think a lot about structure and function. This is because many physical structures of organisms are adaptations that is, they have evolved over time for a certain function. Note that not all physical traits are adaptations vestigial structures, for example, are just leftovers from previous ancestors, and have no function at all in modern descendants.

New thinking the evolution of human cognition

Evolutionary Psychology's central metaphor is the Swiss Army knife. It casts the evolved human mind as a set of cognitive gadgets, each specialized to learn, remember and reason about particular types of information. Evolutionary Psychology has fulfilled an important function. It has drawn attention to the need to integrate cognitive science with evolutionary biology in order to explain not
